MAP HER EMOTIONAL TIMELINE

- ☐ Map Her Emotional Timeline, Item 1: Write down the specific moment you believe she internally decided the marriage was over, not when she told you but when she internally concluded it was finished, because this creates the baseline for understanding which disputes she's mentally already closed.
- ☐ Map Her Emotional Timeline, Item 2: Cross-reference your current legal disputes against what she would consider already settled by listing every active disagreement and marking which ones she may view as decided months ago, which reveals where momentum has quietly shifted against you.
- ☐ Map Her Emotional Timeline, Item 3: Track her response speed across different communication types by noting how quickly she replies to scheduling, child logistics, and immediate financial concerns versus custody proposals and settlement offers, because response speed reveals her true priorities.
- ☐ Map Her Emotional Timeline, Item 4: Classify each silence episode by documenting non-response situations alongside their context to determine whether they're driven by emotional avoidance, genuine disorganization, or calculated strategy rather than assuming the worst, which determines your appropriate response.

RECLAIM PROCEDURAL CONTROL

- ☐ Reclaim Procedural Control, Item 1: File necessary court motions proactively without waiting for her participation, since most jurisdictions allow unilateral action on essential matters like scheduling hearings and finalizing agreements when she stalls, which keeps momentum in your control.
- ☐ Reclaim Procedural Control, Item 2: Document every attempt to move the process forward by maintaining records of letters sent, attorney communications, and her responses or lack thereof, because this creates a verifiable record showing your active engagement if proceedings become necessary.

- ☐ Reclaim Procedural Control, Item 3: Request immediate court intervention when delays extend beyond reasonable timeframes by filing motions to enforce, set hearings, or compel responses, which transfers procedural momentum from her cooperation to judicial authority.

- ☐ Reclaim Procedural Control, Item 4: Send written communications with explicit deadlines stating consequences for continued non-response, ensuring your attorney has documented evidence of her disengagement if escalation becomes necessary and making the process feel real to her.

MAINTAIN ACTIVE PARENTAL ROLE

- ☐ Maintain Active Parental Role, Item 1: Attend every scheduled visit, school event, and extracurricular activity without relying on her reminders, because consistent physical presence establishes you as an active parent rather than someone who needs permission to be involved.

- ☐ Maintain Active Parental Role, Item 2: Communicate directly with teachers, coaches, doctors, and other adults in your children's lives to establish independent relationships that reflect your parental role independent of her mediation and records.

- ☐ Maintain Active Parental Role, Item 3: Build coparenting infrastructure that operates independently of her cooperation by using parenting apps, establishing consistent routines, and maintaining records that demonstrate your commitment regardless of her engagement level.

- ☐ Maintain Active Parental Role, Item 4: Create meaningful rituals and traditions with your children that establish your presence as a permanent parental figure rather than a visitor, reinforcing through consistent action that your role isn't contingent on her approval or ongoing cooperation.
